

Leave Indiana's telephone privacy laws alone. We have experienced peace and quiet at home since these were introduced last year. Telemarketers invade our privacy, are a nuisance and should be outlawed. If we want to purchase something we will approach them.

The absurdity is that local ordinances forbid signs advertising commercial enterprises in residential areas and yet the FCC proposes to relax the laws in Indiana to allow commercial messages right inside our homes. I question the constitutionality of that proposal.

If the ordinance is constitutional, then your proposal is not since there is an obvious conflict. Further, surely we have a State right to determine the level of invasion that is tolerable. Indiana has spoken on this matter. We wish to be left alone, entirely. You too, should leave our laws alone.
